Is your office guilty of printing these costly color documents?

EMAILS

When you print an email, the printer often prints the entire string of emails with multiple pages of color images, colored web links and the email signature with a colored logo. This becomes very expensive if you are paying a metered rate per page because you'll likely be charged the full color rate even if the email just has one web link in it!

WEB PAGES

Printing website pages consumes tons of color toner when there's a rich graphic or image on the page. Most people fail to isolate only the areas of the web page they need printed. Plus, depending on the length of a web page, a print job may be multiple color pages vs. just the image desired.

POWERPOINT PRESENTATIONS

You'd think color toner companies invented power point to consume so many color filled slides. Many of which could be printed in black and white. Also, printing PowerPoint with multiple slides per page can dramatically reduce color toner consumption.

PERSONAL PRINT JOBS

Printing recipes ranked #1 last year among all personal printing jobs done at the office. Usually with a nice big image of what the dish looks like right? Without an effective "Office Print Policy", business printers also see plenty of personal print jobs that include vacation photos, pictures of the family, invitations and other documents with plenty of color that may use more toner than you think!

BIG COLOR DOCUMENTS ON A SMALL PRINTER

Most people send their color print jobs to the printer that's closest to them regardless of the size of the document or printer. As a rule, the larger the printer, the lower the cost per page – especially in color. That's why larger print jobs should be routed to larger color devices to save time, money and extend equipment life.
